Assumptions

• Shift and break times are wall-clock times in Australia/Sydney; durations are measured on the UTC timeline, so daylight saving changes are accounted for.
• A shift belongs to the pay period in which it starts.
• Breaks are taken exactly as recorded: meal breaks are unpaid and rest breaks are paid (all breaks are paid for shiftworkers, cl. 26). Unrecorded breaks are assumed not taken.
• Public holidays are the ones supplied for this pay period: the state calendar where the work was done, plus any the user added.
• Weekly hours count shifts supplied for the 13 days before the pay period as well as those in it. When hours go over a daily or weekly limit, the last hours worked are the overtime.
• The calculated amount is the award minimum. Employers may lawfully pay more.
• Employment details (award coverage, classification, employment type, age and shiftwork status) are as declared by the user.
• Overtime is calculated on a daily basis (cl. 21.2(b)): the first 3 hours of overtime each Monday to Saturday are at the first Table 11 rate.
• Minimum engagement top-ups are paid at the rate of the last minute worked, as if the shift had continued.
• Allowances paid per week are counted for each Monday-to-Sunday week with work in the period.
• The award does not prescribe a rounding method. Each hourly rate is rounded to cents half-up: adult rates from the Table 4 hourly rate, junior rates from the weekly rate times the junior percentage divided by 38. That reproduces every rate published in Schedule B.1 to B.3. Each pay line (rate × hours for one rule and rate over the pay period) is then rounded once to cents, half-up. Employers may round at other stages, so reconciliation applies an explicit rounding tolerance.
